Essay question: Is it legitimate to have British and American Students pay for their higher education?

I am lempled to say that it would be perfectly legitimate to make anyone who had had the chance to get a higher education of the graph of any had the fair to anyone who didn't have the alone to get one in the first place to have, say, the have the chance to get one in the first place to have, say, the texpaper pay for it. But given the scale of the student learn-deletions are the US and in the UK - it is estimated that the delt in the US alone amounts to more than I.I. builton dolors - I don't believe that any shudest blued have to deep that this cast alone.

amodo steared time when the took much low a 8'th amodo .7M makes most timeth to be perf of backsing timber of perf of backsing timber to the state t in the UK. Dozens of millions of Stradents are currently goddled with debt and face hards difficulties that may well follow them for the better part of their life. I truly believe that this shouldn't be the price to pay to have access to a good higher education, about in one of the best universities in the world (like Oxford and Harvard for example)

Thus, I think that any given college trution for in the UK Should take into account the financial situation and social walk of life of every student on one hand, and that governments and higher education institutions Should take action to buck the trend of riding trution fees. That would be the only way to have every student pay for their higher education in a legitimate way.
